'Like' as a filler. Fillers are words or sounds that don't have a specific meaning. Instead, they allow the speaker more time to think.

"Her job is to, like, look after me..."

"That's, like, so unfair!"

He's, like, a really good guy. I wonder if I could, like, borrow your camera?

'Like' to mark reported speech. In other words, it's said before you quote somebody. The form is: to be + like.

"She was like: "Ok, ok, ok.""

When I told him about my new car, he was like: "I don't believe you!"

She asked if I wanted to go to the pub. I was like: "Yeah, that's cool. When shall we meet?"
